In a little while...

When I tell my kids “in a little while...” I create an expectation. I will be there soon or, we’ve almost arrived. Almost, a little while. Expectation.

In a little while we will travel to Holland for a furlough. And we are looking forward to it.

In a little while... we will board the plane.
In a little while... we will attend the wedding of Mart-Jan’s youngest sister.
In a little while... we will see our youngest nephews and nieces for the first time.

In a little while... we hope to enjoy the cool wether in Holland.

In a little while... we hope to meet a lot of you all.

In a little while... we will eat delicious Gouda cheese and stroopwafel;-)

In a little while... we will share about our life and work in different locations.

In a little while... we will have a period of more rest.

In a little while... we will meet friends who have lost dear ones over the last two years.

In a little while... Amy will go to ‘real’ school for the first time.

In a little while... the kids will play with their friends in Holland.

In a little while... Talitha and I will have some more time together.

In a little while... Joy will sell her first, self written book.

In a little while... we will leave our friends in Cambodia for 3 months.

In a little while... we will miss the kids who come to kids-club. God remains!

In a little while... we will leave the Bible study in the capable hands of our Cambodian friends. Exciting. Cool!

In a little while... we will only see Shalom Valley’s progress by photos.

In a little while... we will say ‘bye’ to Eva.

In a little while...

We are looking forward to go. And at the same time we feel a bit strange to leave leave here behind for a little while.

Please, pray with us for a good finishing and hand-over. Pray for the people who will stay here. Pray for a smooth journey and a good transition. Pray for health and valuable moments of connecting.

And who knows, we might not see each other at all. All our plans might fail. “Deo-volente” is what they say. Because who knows the plans of God? Who knows, Jesus might come back before that time. If so, we hope to meet you all in heaven. Who knows, what a celebration would that be!

On the next page you will find a map of places where we hope to present. We might not see you there, but please join us in prayer.

In a little while... See you later!
